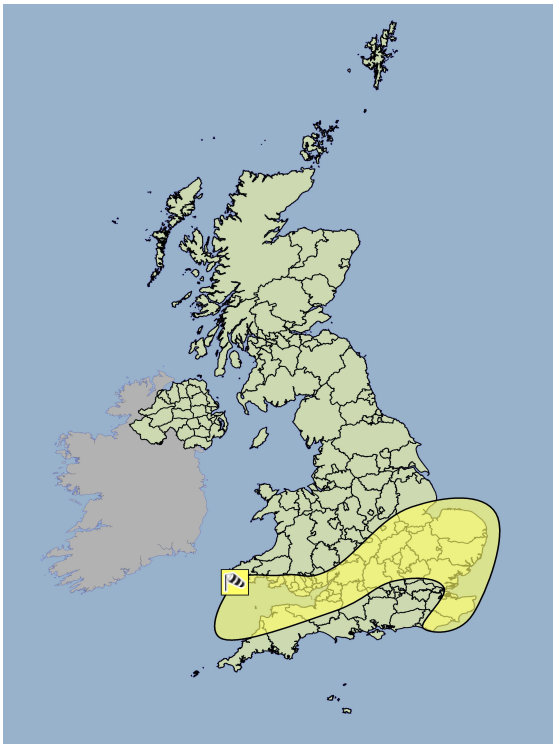
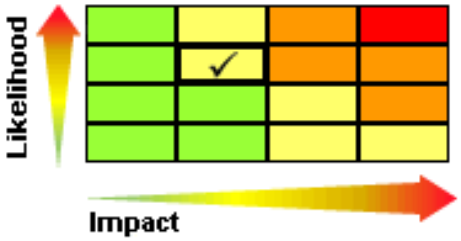
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A rather tight area of low pressure will track across central Britain on Thursday, with a swathe of strong winds to the south. Although gusts will fall well short of those usually associated with warnings, the unseasonable element increases the risk of minor disruption to travel or summer activities.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 06:00 on Thu, 13th Jun 2013 until 20:00 on Thu, 13th Jun 2013

Strong, gusty winds from the southwest or west, have the potential to gust to over 40 mph quite widely on Thursday, and in excess of 50 mph at a few locations. The strongest winds will transfer eastwards through the day, clearing eastern areas by evening. Given the time of year, with trees in full leaf and some holiday traffic and activities, the public should be aware of the possibility of localised minor impacts.
